Biographical Note
Henry was a civil rights activist; co-chair of the Executive Committee of the Mississippi Democratic Party; the president of the Mississippi State Conference of the NAACP from 1953 through 1993; one of the creators of the Council of Federated Organizations in 1961; one of the founders of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party in 1964; and a member of the Mississippi House of Representatives from 1982 through 1996. In this interview Henry discusses meeting John F. Kennedy [JFK] and Robert F. Kennedy; discussing Mississippi and civil rights issues with President JFK; voting rights and poll taxes; the freedom rides; the murder of three young activists in Mississippi during the Freedom Summer of 1964; Mississippi politics beginning in the late fifties; white people in Mississippi; school segregation; the 1960 presidential election; and early contact with the federal government and the Justice Department in 1961, among other issues.

Access
Open.

Usage Restrictions
Copyright of these materials have passed to the United States Government upon the death of the interviewee. Users of these materials are advised to determine the copyright status of any document from which they wish to publish.

Copyright
The copyright law of the United States (Title 17, United States Code) governs the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material. Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or reproduction is not to be “used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research.” If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excesses of “fair use,” that user may be liable for copyright infringement. This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copying order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of copyright law. The copyright law extends its protection to unpublished works from the moment of creation in a tangible form. Direct your questions concerning copyright to the reference staff.

Transcript of Oral History Interview
These electronic documents were created from transcripts available in the research room of the John F. Kennedy Library. The transcripts were scanned using optical character recognition and the resulting text files were proofread against the original transcripts. Some formatting changes were made. Page numbers are noted where they would have occurred at the bottoms of the pages of the original transcripts. If researchers have any concerns about accuracy, they are encouraged to visit the Library and consult the transcripts and the interview recordings.

Suggested Citation
Oral History Interview

Of

Aaron E. Henry

Although a legal agreement was not signed during the lifetime of Aaron E. Henry, upon his death, ownership of the recording and transcript of his interview for the Oral History Program passed to the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Library.

The following terms and conditions apply:

1. The transcript is available for use by researchers.

2. The tape recording shall be made available to those researchers who have access to the transcript.

3. Copyright to the interview transcript and tape is assigned to the United States Government.

4. Copies of the transcript and the tape recording may be provided by the Library to researchers upon request for a fee.

5. Copies of the transcript and tape recording may be deposited in or loaned to institutions other than the John F. Kennedy Library.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Page</th>
<th>Topic</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1</td>
<td>First time meeting John F. Kennedy [JFK], 1962</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Discussing the Mississippi delegation’s concerns with JFK</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>Voting rights and poll taxes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6</td>
<td>The freedom rides</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>The murder of 3 young activists in Philadelphia, Mississippi, 1964</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Contact with White House staff</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Mississippi politics: Ross R. Barnett and James P. Coleman</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18</td>
<td>White people in Mississippi, according to Henry</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19</td>
<td>School segregation in Mississippi</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Henry and the 1960 presidential election</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Early contact with the federal government, Justice Department in Mississippi, 1961</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The following is a copy of a draft transcript prepared by Kennedy Library transcribers from the tape of the interview. Kennedy Library staff members then listened to the tape while reading the transcript and made editorial changes in the transcript to make the transcript as close to a verbatim transcript of what is said on the tape as possible.

A copy of the edited draft transcript was then sent to the interviewee to make any changes or additions he or she felt were necessary. The interviewee then returned the edited draft to the Library.

Some interviewees felt no changes were necessary, some interviewees did not return edited transcripts, and some interviewees died before they had an opportunity to edit the draft transcripts. In these cases, the Library has used the draft transcript it had sent the interviewee in the first place.

Past Library practice has been to then retype the interview transcripts. In the years since the Library's oral history program began in 1964, it has become apparent that many interview transcripts remain closed while they await retyping. With no resources available to get the draft transcripts retyped, the Library has decided to use these draft transcripts as reference copies until resources are available to have the transcripts retyped.

Editorial symbols used in the transcripts include:

- remove
- capitalize
- pull together
- lower case
- trail off
- interruption
- addition
- period

Library staff would be happy to answer any questions you might have about this transcript.
O'BRIEN: Well, when was the first time you met President Kennedy?

HENRY: In 1962 or 1961 you'd have to check that out. It's the year that the NAACP Convention met in Washington. I've just forgotten the exact year but it was one of those two years. I know he was killed the following year in November. We had visits with him.
head of the Community Action/Interest in OEO [Office of Economic Opportunity].

That's Robert Simmons there, his now over at the Civil Rights Compliance. That's James Blake, who is the Poverty programmer in New York State. This is a reporter of an Ebony Magazine here. That's, Bob Brown who at that time was President of the State Conference of South Carolina, and Mr. Holdman who was President of the State Conference of Illinois. This is largely a State Conference of field electives sessions with the President and I say, I think that it must have been '62.

O'BRIEN: Did you have much chance to talk to him about politics in Mississippi at that time?

HENRY: Well, yes! The Mississippi delegation was given private orient with him and we were largely concerned with the fact that something like twelve to fifteen thousand black people in the state were able to participate in politics. It was largely the will of the white power structure of the various communities that dictated whether or not blacks were able to participate in the political era, and we even talked about federal legislation at that time, to come back of which he was highly in favor all along.

O'BRIEN: What kind of legislation were you talking about at that point?

HENRY: We were talking about actually what Lyndon finally got passed, the Voting rights act of 1965, which Kennedy was for as far back as 1962 but was not able to get it by the committee's and through congress because of the affair added to. [Interruption]

O'BRIEN: Did you talk to him at that point about your own organization in Mississippi and in Mississippi politics?

HENRY: No, not in terms of a shovenistic seance. We talked largely about the problem that was there and that denied a section of the population of the state the right to vote. We did not get into whether we were concerned with the Democratic Party, the Republican Party or any other sector of shovenistic politics. We felt the problem was bigger than that. Whether the guy wanted to register as a Republican or as a Democrat or whatever you wanted to register as. The fact that he didn't have the right to register and the fact that he had to pay a poll tax in order to register; the fact that he had to pay a poll tax in order to vote, not to register but to vote, to help pass a voter registration test that required of every guy registered to be able to interpret in the section of the Constitution the State of Mississippi to the satisfaction of the circuit clerk. It wasn't a question of whether the guy was right or wrong, but that he satisfied the clerk. You didn't know what section of the Constitution you were going to get until you walked into the man's office and set out like the register. So, when you've had these kinds of obstacles to overcome, you became pretty much a victim of this structureless system and only those people that the system wanted registered got registered. So this is pretty much the way it was. Of course, also than we were complaining about the segregation that prevailed in public transportation as you recall we were in the year of '62 or '63. We had the freedom rides lead by James Farmer that came into the state and, of course, we highly identified with those and the public accommodations situations as far as hotels and restaurants were concerned.

frankly, the year before must have been '62 or '61. We met in Atlanta and Ralph Bunch who was at that time, I was Under-Special Political Affairs, Secretary of the United Nations to.

I believe was the keynote speaker for the convention and there wasn't a hotel in town that would rent him a room. We, of course, picketed all the hotels in Atlanta and used it as a slogan: "that the Vice President of the world came to Atlanta and couldn't get a bed." These were some of the things of drama that we used to plead a case. So we were largely concerned at the time that we met with him was with the question of the noncompliance of the school system with the 1954 School Desegregation Bill which was a echo of the Supreme Court which we felt was tantamount to law, and with the voters registration aspect, as well as the continued dehumanization of persons who were (abide by the) constant refusal of their right to eat in restaurants, and sleep in a bed at a hotel or either to use a restroom in a service station. Certainly many black people had to travel throughout the state without having the opportunity to use a restroom. They'd stop at the side of the road, some highway patrolman or local policeman would arrest you for indecent O'BRIEN: How about Robert Kennedy, did you meet Robert Kennedy this time?

HENRY: Let's see, no, I don't think Bobby was around at this particular time. When I first recall meeting Bobby was in 1964. I probably had met him prior, then, but the first opportunity of exploration with him came as a result of the murder of the three young fellows down in Philadelphia. Of course, beside the fact that we were highly involved in this and did much of the recruiting nationwide to get the kids in... Frankly, one of the boys Andy Goodman from New York; I personally brought him from his mother's house and the only night he spent alive in Mississippi was in my house, and I shipped him to Meridian the next day and then he was assigned to... Meridian was an assignment station, and he went on over to Philadelphia.
with Goodman to investigate this burning church, on the way back they were arrested and perhaps murdered sometime during the night. Well the NAACP had been called into session, and I went too. We dismissed the convention and went into Washington for a demonstration against the Justice Department because we felt that the FBI [Federal Bureau of Investigation] was to some degree responsible for what had happened because once the kids were missing we had a twenty minute discipline cycle; anytime you're twenty minutes late for anything you call in. And after the kids were late over an half an hour and had not called in, we called the FBI and told them what the problem was, that three guys were missing and we didn't know where they were.
we asked them to call the jail between Louisvile and Philadelphia to ascertain whether they were there or not. Well what they did, I really don't know, but the answer we got from the person we talked to was that the FBI did not have the authority to intervene; that we had not proven that they had been taken across the state line, and they had not been missing twenty-four hours. So therefore this was not a case that they could get into. And so we, in response to this, knowing that at least from a ricochet point of view the FBI is allegedly under the Justice Department, of course we know that J. Edgar Hoover runs his own shop, O'BRIEN: He did?

HENRY: Yes. Just for himself. So this was really the first time that I recall at this moment, you know, meanwhile I'd have to think back more definite. You hit me cold.

"how or what would be your relationship with the fellows then and it's the sort of thing I definitely appreciate, but it's been so casual and sometimes personal and the otherimes impersonal that I don't remember things in sequences when you're talking about people you got to know and were with fairly often.

O'BRIEN: Well, going back to that first meeting with John Kennedy, how about people around him and the White House staff? Do you recall meeting any of these people?

HENRY: No. This was really him and us, The President and the NAACP, with people like Roy Wilkins, Clarence Mitchell, Henry Moon, John Morrell really serving as a liaison between him and us. It was more of a get-acquainted session than it was one of finding out what his legislative ideas and next legislative program was going to be.

O'BRIEN: Well, when you wanted to make a contact with the White House, than you went through Mitchell and Moon or . . .

HENRY: Well, then but of course after this meeting we had direct access to him.

O'BRIEN: Was there anybody in the White House that was particularly simpatico that you could go through, how about Kenny O'Donnell or O'Brien . . .

HENRY: No. Well, that O'Brien was you know, amicable but anytime we had trouble getting to the President, he had appointed a young fellow in Justice, named John Doe.
that could always get us to him by telephone. If you called John, John would arrange it.

O'BRIEN: Well, going back in your own involvement in Mississippi politics, what were you doing in 1960, late 50's and 60's? Let's say, starting with the election of Governor [Ross R.] Barnett here? did you take a part in that at all, in that election?

HENRY: Well, yes, I'm sure I voted in it. Certainly, would have had no real enthusiasm about candidates, frankly, we've had so much of the less-of-the-evils kind of politics in this area. I've never had an opportunity, an all-out, actually for a guy that I really wanted as far as a Governor was concerned, but we've...[

O'BRIEN: How did you react to Coleman?
HENRY: Well, I thought Coleman was less able than Barnett, but in terms of identifying with the problems of the poor and the black, Coleman's campaign was just as racist as Barnett's.

O'BRIEN: Have you ever met either of these men and talked to them for any length of time? What's your impressions of Coleman?

HENRY: Well, I think that he's smarter than Barnett. I think he's pretty much what you call a bigot Northern-style as compared to Barnett, bigot Southern-style. I think that Barnett identifies himself from the word go. What you can expect of him. I recall Mr. Barnett's first year in the Governor's office, he gave an organization known as the Council of Federated Organizations, which was a compilation of the civil rights, church, civic, entertainment groups.
committee from this group an opportunity to visit with him. And we went in and sat down with the Governor and the Attorney General [Joe T. Patterson], who just died, and Secretary of State, Heber Ladner, members of the State Sovereignty Commission, and I assume some guys from the White Citizens' Council; there were a whole room full to them. We identified to him, at that point, what we were discontent with and what we were going to move against. Of course, this was still the question of segregation and the continued violation of states (in '54) The Supreme Court's decision, and we enumerated the question of police brutality, and the absence of employment of blacks from the various State Bureau's and Agencies, that we intended to use whatever means we could find within the Federal Government to overcome these problems. So we just simply told us, "Well I understand your point of view and I want you to understand mine when you get ready to move against the state, I'm going to move against you with everything I've got." So we understand each other, you see.

Now the difference with Mr. Coleman was we could never get an audience with him. He probably had audiences with some people within the teachers profession or some members in the black community that were pretty much parrots to what he wanted to hear. Something was true with Paul Johnson, And I guess now with John Bell. But of the last four Governors the only guy that has granted an audience to a committee from the State Community so selected by the blacks themselves, was Barnett.
O'BRIEN: You feel that he had a pretty good grasp of Mississippi politics; a pretty good grasp of what was going on in the early '60s before he was Governor?

HENRY: Oh sure. He knew the white folks were in control, sure.

O'BRIEN: Well, do you think his pretty reflective of how white people in Mississippi think?

HENRY: Yes. Well, I'm not too sure he is actually reflective of how a majority of them think, but he is understandable as to how a lot of them act. Because many whites act out of intimidation and fear rather than out of the really the confines of heart and the confines of soul. The number of guys that it's my opportunity to identify and associate with; it's like the two cases now. We've been friends for twelve or fifteen years, Mississippi boys,
The kind of report you see between us is not at all unusual and I know that more whites don't think the same way than do. But when it comes to having to make an identification of how you feel with other whites present that you know or that you don't really know how they feel or you know that they don't think you do, most whites are intimidated and are afraid to take a stand. That's true in Mississippi and Maine, California and everywhere else.

O'BRIEN: Well, did the rise in the Citizens' Councils in those years have a lot of effect?

HENRY: Yes. The Citizens' Council was born somewhere in '54 or '55, which was after the passage of the Supreme Court's decision of 1954 which outlawed segregation of public schools, but it really didn't make too much difference in the terms of the activities of white people nor blacks, because this was pretty much the image that the whites had projected all along.

O'BRIEN: Was there an increase in legislation in attempts to institutionalize segregation in those years?

HENRY: There were acts passed, with attempts to strengthen the opportunity of lasting with the segregation syndrome longer.

I remember one particularly; they passed a bill that outlawed the public school accommodation attendance law, which was really saying that no white kid would have to, would be forced by law, such in school with a black. This was the real intent of it.

Of course, this law now has more difficulty in terms of an increasing amount of illiteracy. In 1969, there was than a decreasing amount of illiteracy. I'd like to refer you to a column by Jerry -- it's about two Sunday's ago, you'd have to do a little bit of archives work to find it. Where he spoke about the great number of people who start school and who don't complete it. [ Interruption]

O'BRIEN: What were you doing in the '60 election? Did you take any involvement at all in Mississippi politics, Presidential election or in his primary?

HENRY: No. Not as, shall we say, an activist or overt individual involved directly in the campaign. I was attracted to Kennedy, like many other Americans were, as we saw him on TV. Then there were many people in the community who actively proselyting for him, some because of his religious beliefs, and of course, I had attended a Catholic institution and many of the friends of the white community, I developed early in life were members of the Catholic Church. So this is where we really began much of our dialogue on the question of politics, in which we were going to have to go. I sat up all night until the election was over. To see him win it by the skin of his teeth and was glad that he won it.

O'BRIEN: Did you serve on any committees or contribute any money or anything like this to any organizations?

HENRY: No.

O'BRIEN: When was the first time in your involvement in politics that you started making contact with the federal government? Were they coming in here in your role...

HENRY: The first time that we had any contact with the federal government that I would consider meaningful was immediately after the election of Mr. Kennedy.

John Doqr and the young fellow who was handling the trial of John... he'd never forgive me if I couldn't think of his name, Robert Owens. They came in one day and wanted to get some idea about what we thought was right, what we thought was wrong, and how we go about resolving it and identifying themselves as agents from the United States Department of Justice. We had been studied so many times by agents from the federal government. Many times the guy's would walk off and leave the notes from the table. The next guy who came in had absolutely no information on what conversation you'd had with the guy previous.

It was just a situation where there was some toe-touching but no real identity of involvement. [Interruption]

O'BRIEN: Let's go into 1961 and some of those early contacts with the Justice Department.
HENRY: Do you feel that you got a pretty good...

Well, as I say, after Doc and Bob came in, we told them, "now we're going to sit down and talk to you fellow," but we know nothing's going to happen because we've been through this ritual time and time again; we wasted your time and it's wasted ours. We're not about to give you the opportunity to say that you didn't do anything because we didn't cooperate with you." So we carried them upstairs and sat them down, the Branch Leadership—R.L. Drew, who was Chairman of the Board; Vera Pigee, who's Secretary; I was there and I'm sure, maybe Cleo Jackson and H.Y. Actkins, Treasurer, Seven or eight of us and... We talked about all the things I've mentioned to you that we recently spoke to Mr. Kennedy about. They promised us that there would be a different kind of relationship from now on. If they were not able to produce, they themselves would find something else to do because they felt highly committed to the same kinds of problems and that we did. So, [ Interruption ]